This research project is being carried out at the Pontifical Catholic University of Campinas (PUC-Campinas), under the responsibility/coordination of Professor Lucas Catib de Laurentiis, with the support of the Public Safety and Education Departments of the Municipality of Campinas-SP. Adopting bibliographic analysis as its methodology (academic papers published in the last 20 years will be collected from international databases), as well as documentary analysis (judgments of the Federal Supreme Court will be collected, as well as systematizing Brazilian norms and international agreements internalized in the Brazilian legal system that deal with predictive policing), the project seeks to compose a robust theoretical framework regarding the concepts involved in predictive policing mechanisms, as well as mapping the dangers and consequences of the unrestricted application of these instruments. As an expected result, the research seeks to present a sophisticated theoretical framework, which presents concrete solutions to the criminological dilemmas verified in the Égide project".

4. The preliminary project to be presented by the candidate must clearly develop the theme indicated in the previous item in up to eight pages, based on an international theoretical framework, containing i) introduction; ii) development; iii) timetable with the expected submission of at least four scientific articles in high-impact journals; and iv) bibliographical references (maximum of 10 pages).
